

What did a Tudor apprentice get?

Some Tudor children left home to learn a trade from someone called a master.

A leather workshop, reconstructed

Look: the master shows, and the boy copies.

That's how Tudor apprentices learned a trade: by working next to someone who could, often for seven years.

What did a Tudor apprentice get?

This was the deal.
The apprentice worked for the master.

The master gave him food,
clothes and a bed.
He wasn't paid.

So what did an apprentice get out of it?

★ An apprenticeship could provide food and a home now, and a way to earn a living later.

Help now or help later?

An apprenticeship gave two kinds of help: food and a home now, and a way to earn a living later.

A weak reason says: "I put it there because it goes there."

A strong reason says: "I put a pair of shoes his master made him under Helped him straight away, because he could wear them now." The strong one says when it helped him.

1 Read each card with your partner.

2 Put each card under a heading.

3 Pick the card that was hardest to place.

4 Write why you put it there.

Help now or help later?

Reconstruction of Tudor bread-making

Imagined Tudor case: a baker takes on an apprentice called Tom.

Helped him straight away

Helped him when he grew up

Put each card under a heading. Then pick the card that was hardest to place, and write why you put it there.

Help now or help later? - check

Helped him straight away

a hot dinner every day

a straw mattress by the oven

a warm coat for winter

Helped him when he grew up

knowing when bread is baked just right

his own bakery one day